ABSTRACT

In 1997, a survey of distance education activities was distributed to all 32 Washington State community and technical colleges measuring number of courses, total seat counts, and quarterly full-time equivalent students (FTES). Survey findings included the following: (1) within individual distance education implementations, telecourses and correspondence courses were most popular; (2) since 1995-96 system distance education activities have experienced a steady increase of enrollments (up 12%) and FTES (up 16%) during 1996-97; (3) state support is the most common form of funding; (4) in comparison with total instructional efforts, distance education receives less state support than the classes in all forms, and a greater percentage of classes are funded through self support for distance education and FTES than for classes in all forms; and (5) though the number of colleges offering distance education decreased from 29 in 1994-95 to 27 in 1996-97, the number of classes offered increased by 45%. Appendices include the 1996-1997 survey instrument, a report on Washington colleges' system total instructional effort from all funding sources, and a chronology of community and technical college distance education. Overview

OVERVIEW

Introduction

In cooperation with the State Board for Community and Technical Colleges and the Communications Technology Center, an inventory of 1994-1995 Washington State community and technical college distance education activities was completed in 1995. Class data, enrollment data, and FTE data were collected by funding source for eight predefined implementations of distance education. Results from that survey established a baseline of distance education activity in the Washington State community and technical colleges. The survey was subsequently repeated to gather data for 1995-1996 and 1996-1997 distance education activities.

Purpose

This study of 1996-1997 distance education activities was conducted to update data obtained in similar surveys of 1994-1995 and 1995-1996 distance education activities in the Washington State community and technical colleges. These data are summarized in a number of forms--individual college profiles, distance education implementation profiles, and summaries of system distance education efforts. Yearly summaries and comparisons are included to provide a perspective of the distance education changes, patterns, and trends that occurred during the three years in which these studies were conducted.

Survey Methodology

For consistency of interpretations, definitions of distance education and eight (8) implementations of distance education were developed (see Appendix A). A survey instrument was designed and distributed to all 32 Washington State Community and Technical Colleges (see Appendix A). Distance education activities were collected via data matrices of 1996-1997 distance education activities by quarter and implementation. For each implementation, three major measures were recorded: 1) Number of Courses; 2) Total Seatcounts (duplicated enrollments); and 3) Quarterly Full-Time Equivalent Students (FTES). Each measure was inventoried by funding source: 1) State Supported; 2) Contracted; and 3) Self-Supported. All 32 Washington State community and technical colleges completed and returned the survey instrument.

The definitions, data categories, and data collection instrument used for this study are identical to those used for the 1994-1995 survey. Spokane Community College and Spokane Falls Community College data were combined into a "district" response for the 1994-1995 survey. Data were subsequently were reported separately in the 1995-1996 and 1996-1997 studies. To provide a base for comparisons with 1994-1995 activities, data from these two colleges are combined in Section VIII of this report.

Report Methodology

This report is organized into nine sections and four appendices. Section I provides an overview and summary of the project. Sections II through IX move from listings of individual college distance education activities to a comprehensive overview of distance education in the Washington State Community and Technical College System. Section II provides individual college quarterly 1996-1997 distance education activities listed by implementation type. In Section III, individual college distance education data are reported by quarterly summaries of the eight distance education implementation types.

Section IV reports yearly distance education implementation summaries followed by charts of quarterly funding source distributions of distance education implementations. In Section V, distance education implementation data are aggregated to report total quarterly and yearly distance education efforts. Section VI provides quarterly system analysis off each implementation type as a percentage of distance education instruction and as a percentage of instructional effort from all sources. Section VII provides quarterly and yearly system distance education summaries as well as analyses of quarterly System effort by funding source.

Section VIII provides comparisons of 1994-1995 and 1995-1996 activities with 1996-1997 activities for individual colleges. Section IX compares aggregate 1994-1995 and 1995-1996 distance education activities with aggregate 1996-1997 distance education activities.

Appendix A contains the survey instrument and operational definitions of "distance education" and the eight distance education implementations. Appendix B reports total instructional efforts for the community and technical colleges from all funding sources. Appendix C contains a chronology of key distance education developments in the Washington Community and Technical College System.

NOTE: Throughout the report, quarterly summaries reflect quarterly FTE data and annualized summaries reflect annualized FTE data.

Observations

- Colleges participate in all but two of the identified implementations of distance education. No distance education activity was reported for audiographic teleclasses or one-way video teleclasses.

- Telecourses are the largest implementation of distance education. More colleges (26) participate in telecourse delivery than any other form of distance education.

- Telecourses account for the large majority of all distance education generated FTES. The 1,943 telecourse FTES represent 72% of all distance education generated FTES.

- With six participating colleges, correspondence courses produce the highest number of courses, but are a distant second in the number of generated FTES (527).

- Online/Computer courses rank second in the number of participating colleges (14), but rank a distant third in the number of FTES (93).

- With the exception of one implementation at one college, all distance education activities are funded either through state support or self support. The one exception is a college that offers a large number of correspondence courses on a contracted basis.

- State support is by far the most common form of funding for distance education. It supports more than 50% of all FTES from the six reported distance education implementations. For two distance education implementations (two-way video and multimedia), it supports all generated FTES.

- Five colleges participate in two-way video teleclasses. Those five colleges generated approximately the same number of FTES (92) as the 14 colleges that participated in Online/Computer distance education delivery (93 FTES).

- Audio teleclasses (2 colleges) and multimedia classes (one college) are the least commonly reported implementations of distance education and represent a very small percentage of total distance education generated FTES.

Observations

- Twenty-seven (27) colleges participated in some form of distance education during 1996-1997.
- Distance education enrollments and FTES grew steadily from quarter to quarter during 1996-1997.
- State support funding accounted for a bare majority of distance education classes (51%), but a large majority of total distance education seatcounts (75%) and distance education FTES (73%).
- Contract funding accounted for 30% of total distance education classes, due primarily to the availability of a large number of correspondence programs through military contracts at one college. Enrollment in contracted distance education classes was relatively low, as evidenced by the small percentage of total enrollments (6%) and FTES (6%).
- The percentage of self supported distance education classes (19%) was consistent with the percentage of distance education seatcounts (19%) and distance education FTES (21%).

Observations

- The percentage of distance education classes (51%) funded by state support is less than the percentage of classes in all forms (77%). The FTES percentage for state supported distance education is closer to the percentage of state supported FTES for instruction in all forms (83%).

- A greater percentage of classes are funded through self support for distance education (19%) than for classes in all forms (13%). An even greater disparity exists for distance education self supported FTES (21%) when compared with self supported FTES from instruction in all forms (3%).

- Contract funding accounts for a greater percentage of classes for distance education (30%) than for classes in all forms (10%), but produces a smaller percentage of FTES for distance education (6%) than instruction in all forms (14%).

- Distance education FTES account for about 2% of all system-generated FTES.

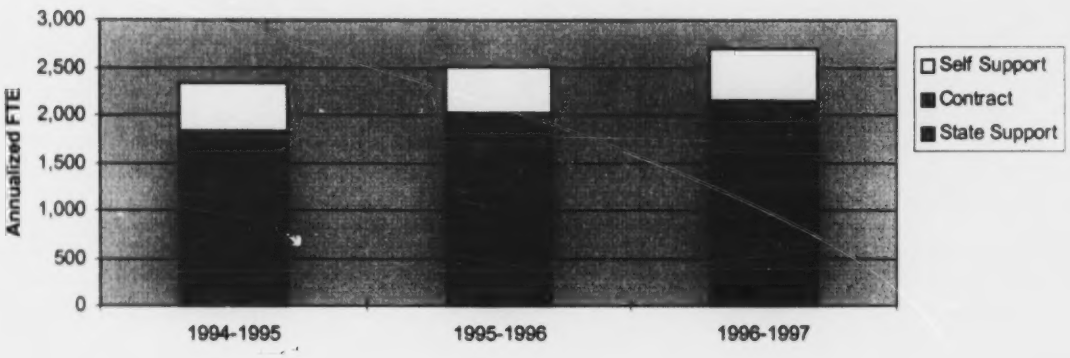
1994-1995 through 1996-1997 Distance Education FTE Distributions



Observations

- The number of colleges offering some form of distance education in 1996-1997 (27) decreased from the 29 colleges that participated during 1994-1995 and the 30 colleges that participated during 1995-1996.
- After a 50% increase in distance education classes in 1995-1996, the number of distance education classes decreased by 4% during 1996-1997.
- Distance education enrollments increased by 1% over 1995-1996 figures.
- Distance education FTES grew at similar rates over the past two years.
- During the three years of these studies, the number of distance education classes increased by 45%, the number of distance education enrollments increased by 12%, and the number of distance education FTES increased by 16%.

Discussion

Influential Factors

Over the course of the three years during which these studies were conducted, those efforts have been influenced, promoted, or supported by a number of initiatives:

- Distance education achieved respectability, acceptance and endorsement by higher education administration and the public.
- Emerging technologies and infrastructure advances provided a foundation for alternative learning environments that support time-independent, place-independent, and pace-independent learning.

- The Educational Technology Initiative (ETI) provided funds for technological infrastructures as well as funds to enhance learning through the use of technology. Many colleges used these funds to acquire technological tools and resources to support distance education.

- The Educational Technology Strategic Planning Project (ETSPP) established a context and framework for distance education in the Washington State Community and Technical College System

- More colleges offer complete AA degrees through distance education.

- The state funded the K-20 project to provide a statewide high speed Internet and interactive video backbone for all higher education and K-12. All colleges were equipped with associated equipment to support shared distance education initiatives.

- The numbers of online courses and interactive video courses increased--due in part to investments from the ETI and K-20 funding initiatives.

- The WACTC adopted a distance education vision statement.

- There is a growing interest and willingness by the colleges to establish cooperative efforts, such as regional consortia and inter-institutional cooperatives, for the delivery of courses and faculty development by distance education.

- Statewide distance education "course coding" was included in MIS reporting mechanisms.

- The Instruction Commission accepted an interactive video facilities operation model.

- The Online AA Consortium was endorsed and funded by the WACTC to provide a full AA degree.

- The Washington Higher Education Distance Education Consortium (WHEDEC) was formed as a consortium of the state's two-year and four-year colleges to promote and coordinate statewide distance education.

Commentary

As experiences with distance education continue to expand, there is a growing awareness that distance education is an interconnected system of people, resources, technologies, methodologies, and services. Over the past three years, the Washington State community and technical colleges used emerging technologies and innovative distance education methodologies to expand access to instructional programs and services.

Data reported in this study may reflect the growth and directions of distance education experienced by higher education throughout the nation and around the world. Online/computer classes may be one area in which growth in Washington's colleges may be attributed, in part, to the tremendous worldwide interest generated by the emergence of this methodology. Yet the growth in online/computer courses and two-way interactive video courses may not have been possible in the Washington community and technical colleges without the funding support provided by the ETI, the K-20 initiative, and individual college commitments. Complementing these factors are the increased leadership and demonstrated commitments evidenced by the system's presidents (WACTC), instructional administrators (Instruction Commission), distance education coordinators (CODE), and other constituent groups in moving the distance education agenda from philosophical discussions to implementation strategies.

Instruments and measures required to maintain an inventory of distance education must go beyond the manual, ad hoc process used in the three distance education inventories and become more embedded in normalized administrative procedures. Inconsistent interpretations of college distance education activities are evident in reviewing data reported over the past three years. Changes, even when the impact is seemingly minimal, have significant implications in areas with small bases of activity. As interest in distance education grows and decision making becomes ever more dependent on accurate and consistent data, there is a corresponding need to develop statewide, consistent, reliable, and convenient tools to measure outcomes. The recently approved distance education course coding mechanism is a step in that direction. Additional refinement of the course coding process may be necessary as further refinements of necessary and desirable reporting outcomes emerge.

Distance education as a "separate initiative" of the Washington community and technical college system is evaporating. Distance education technologies and methodologies are increasingly becoming fused with all forms of educational practice. It may be more important and beneficial to the Washington Community and Technical College System in the future to focus on the continuum of distributed multimodal educational practices, rather than distance education as an singular adjunct activity.

1996-1997 Survey Instrument

Washington Community and Technical Colleges
1996-1997 Survey of Distance Education Activities

CONTEXT

This survey updates data collected from 1994-1995 and 1995-1996 Surveys of Distance Education. As with the past surveys, eight implementations of distance education are defined to identify and track trends within the Washington State community and technical college system.

PURPOSE

The purpose of this survey is to continue the baseline inventory of distance education activities within the Washington Community and Technical Colleges system. Data will be compared with the results from the 1994-1995 and 1995-1996 surveys to assist in tracking and planning for distance education activities within the system. Individual college and systemwide distance education profiles will be developed.

METHODOLOGY

To provide consistency of interpretation, definitions of eight implementations of "distance education" are provided. A data matrix is provided to collect distance education effort by the eight implementation types for each academic term (Summer 1996 through Spring 1997). Each data matrix consists of three major measures subdivided by three funding sources. The three major measures are:

1) Number of Course Sections
2) Total Seatcount (duplicated headcount)
3) Quarterly Full-Time Equivalent Students (QFTES)

Each major measures is further subdivided in three discrete funding sources:

1) State Supported
2) Contracted
3) Self-Supported

Please report college distance education data by these categories for each term.

TIMEFRAME: Please return surveys by Friday, September 19, 1997.

PROCEDURE:

One survey is to be completed by each college. Please send completed forms to:

Ron Baker. Distance Education Director
Oregon Community Colleges
P.O. Box 14007
Salem OR 97309-7070

Responses may also be sent by fax (503-399-6992) or e-mail (bakr@chemek.cc.or.us).

FOR ASSISTANCE:

Contact Ron Baker by phone (503-315-4596) or e-mail (bakr@chemek.cc.or.us)

DEFINITION OF TERMS

Distance Education:

Distance Education (DE) is a strategy to achieve identified educational outcomes through planned instructional activities in which a learner is separated from an instructor by time or place.

Correspondence Classes:

Correspondence classes are neither time dependent nor place dependent. Students work independently with little or no in-person contact between student and instructor. Class materials are print-based, but may be augmented with audio or video cassettes. Instruction materials are delivered via mail systems or FAX machines and communication between student and instructor is conducted by mail, FAX, or e-mail.

Teleclass:

Teleclasses are live class sessions that are distributed through telecommunications technologies in real-time to students who are at a place different from that of the instructor(s).

Telecourse:

Telecourses are integrated courses of study that combine written materials, audio, and/or video materials (via cassette or other audio/video distribution systems) with instructor oversight through additional presentation, discussion or office meetings. Review sessions, tutorials, and examinations are coordinated by the instructor who is available for individual assistance.

Teleconferencing:

The use of electronic channels to facilitate interactive communication among groups of people at two or more locations. Teleconferencing is the generic term that refers to a variety of technologies and applications, including those defined below.

Audioconferencing:

The use of voice communications, usually accomplished using standard telephone lines. When more than one person is in a single location, speakerphones or special audioconference terminal equipment is employed. When more than two locations are involved, multipoint network bridging equipment is used.

Audiographics:

The interconnection of graphic display devices located at sites separated by distance permitting participants to view the same high resolution still-frame image at each site. Some systems allow annotation, writing or drawing on the screen. Audiographics is usually used to enhance another form of teleconference, such as an audioconference, where joint viewing of high resolution images is important. Connections can be made using standard telephone lines or digital communications lines, including LAN/WAN and ISDN.

One-Way Videoconferencing:

Employs one-way motion-video from an origination site to multiple receive sites. It is used where it is not important to the content or message to "see" participants at the receive sites. Receiving sites are usually provided a way to respond to the origination site, usually by audioconference (voice) or facsimile. Common transmission systems include satellite and ITFS (Instructional Television Fixed Service). Standard telephone lines usually provide the interactive audio portion where desired.

Two-Way Videoconferencing:

Similar in concept to audioconferencing, permitting voice and motion-video communications through either analog or digital signal distribution systems. If digital , a Coder/Decoder (CODEC) "compresses" the data to fit the transmission system being used (digital telephone lines (ISDN or Switched 56), fiber optics, digital satellite, or microwave). When more than two locations are involved, multipoint network bridging equipment or a switching system is used.

Computer/Online Conferencing:

Uses computer-to-computer interactions (World Wide Web, etc.) as a means of time-independent, location-independent information sharing and communication between participants. Course-related materials are exchanged electronically and e-mail is used for person-to-person or person-to-group communication. Real-time conferencing may be available through "chat" software or desktop video software.

Multimedia Teleconferencing:

An application where at least three of the above forms of teleconferencing are used together to appeal to a variety of human senses or perceptions. An example is a teleconference using two-way audio/videoconferencing and audiographics. The videoconference system provides audio and video while the audiographics provides high resolution still frame visuals.
